

student from Union Seminary in New York there. They also had Robert E. Speer as a guest. We got there in the evening and were there over night and next morning we came down to breakfast. Mrs. Woods (I think her name was) introduced us to Robert E. Speer. She said, Mr. MacRae is from Princeton; and Mr. Johnson is from Princeton, and Mrs. So and So from Union Seminary. Well, she said, we've got two Princeton and one Union. What are you Dr. Speer? Well, Dr. Speer was a graduate from Princeton Seminary. The story was around that he had the highest average that any student of Princeton University had ~~never~~ ever had in its history. But he referred to that laughingly at the table, so I don't know whether that was an erroneous story or not. He was a graduate of Princeton. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of Princeton. She said, Which are you? Well, he said, Historically I am Princeton. But locally - - - Oh, she said, You're Union? "Locally, he said, I'm New York city." I thought with all those ties he had with Princeton, how would it hurt him to say, My background is Princeton. But he just was afraid of his life. ~~Twenty~~<sup>Thirty</sup> years before the Presbyterian church had officially declared Union to be teaching false doctrine and Union had broken its ties with the church. While Princeton was officially the Presbyteriana seminary of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. When he was not willing to take a stand that much, I just felt I couldn't have confidence in him. But it was 7 or 8 years later, people were saying, As long as Robert E. Speer is there, you can have confidence! So you have all these factors entering in.

Well, I think I'd better quit now. I had a lot more things to mention here. I don't know whether they'd be important or not. You can think of others too. You'd probably better turn it off here.
