

the part of the Lamb of God. In these three years He lived in a public way. People could see Him and know how He lived and become aware of all that He did. His words scathingly pointed out the implications of sin. But after it all He could turn to them and say "Which of you convicteth me of sin?" No one could so so for there was no fault in Him. This was the Lamb of God without blemish and without spot.

How unique is the life of Jesus. From that day to this all who have studied it have bowed before it and confessed that no man ever lived as He lived. How natural it is. What a ring of truth there is in the accounts and yet how utterly it transcends any other life that has ever been lived or imagined. What fiction writer has ever produced a character like Jesus? Someone has said that it would take a Jesus to invent a Jesus. It is a marvellous proof of the truth of the Biblical account that the character therein portrayed is so beyond all possible effort of the human imagination.

Everyone who has studied the life of Jesus has seen that He is the Son of God, that He must be for no other could possible live as He lived. Two men once rode together in a railroad train in America. Both were sceptics. One of them a noted sceptic. The latter turned to his companion and said "Jesus was really a very remarkable man. Someone ought to write a book which would present him as he really was, a very remarkable man but only a man".
