

we don't have the distinction. In German you do. Now in German you have to use one or the other, and thereby indicate a thought. In English you don't indicate the thought. Now there are thoughts indicated in any language by certain grammar, and there are ~~xx~~ other thoughts not indicated. And you cannot get absolute precision, but the particular thing that is ~~xxxx~~ indicated may be one of several possibilities, all of which are equally true, or it may be the only one which may be true, and we have to study in ~~x~~ each particular situation and see what is the case. Verbal inspiration means that this word is a correct word there. It may be the only correct word, but it isn't necessarily.

We shall have to stop there, I guess. Sorry that we don't have more time for ~~x~~ questions, but there was quite a ~~xx~~ bit of ground to cover this morning.