

situation in their area in order to see whether there is evidence of a Roman Catholic conspiracy to undermine American liberties. Whenever they find evidence of such a conspiracy, they must be sure to write to the appropriate officials, and to take effective measures through the ballot box and through the courts to stifle it before it becomes strong. They must constantly watch and work and pray. Only in this way can they make sure that American liberties will not go the way that they went in Poland and Spain, and that America will not become another Colombia or Quebec.

If it is the intention of the leaders of the Roman Catholic hierarchy to suppress American freedoms as soon as they have the power to do so, the time to start fighting such a step is not after they are entrenched, but as soon as their intentions become evident.
