

"Don't mention my name at all in connection with it". So she came and she sat there among the group when we dedicated the building down there and nobody knew who she was and nearly everybody in Wilmington of any means, somebody would guess that they were the ones who had given it but what a stir it made in Wilmington that somebody would give a wonderful property like that and not insist on their name being connected with it. However, about 3 or 4 years later, I guess a little more than that, when she died, she said that she would appreciate it if we would name the place after her father, who had been a fine, Christian man, who had been in the steel ~~XXXXXX~~ business - he was a doctor but connected with the steel business and her brother was active in the steel business, if we would name it after him and put up his picture in the building. So we put it up in the building down there and when we came up here we brought it with us and its in the dining room now - the picture of Dr. Huston of Coatesville, Pa. the father of Mrs. Haines, who gave us that lovely property down there. Well, the Lord got but we grew then until that place was too crowded. We had an auditorium in the place we could get 50 students in and when we had over a 100 students you can imagine how we were crowded. We had classes that were jammed and we 'd rent a building over here a block and we'd rent a building over here two blocks and we'd rent a building over her three blocks and we'd go back to the church where we started ~~XXXX~~ to hold our chapel services and we couldn't get the people into our lovely home that we had. It was grand only just too small for a school as big as we had. And we didn't know what to do. And Dr. McIntire, the President of our Board of Directors said, "The thing to do is to move away from here and get the whole thing in one property." And I was afraid, on my life, he'd find a good property way out in the heart of the wilderness some where, where we had no access to great libraries, places for graduate work, no access to great
