

he'd listen to that that I tried to give him 10 or 15 years ago, and he wouldn't take, after listening to that I've come to the conclusion that we should insist that a person learn to speak in a way that we think is effective. And then after you graduate, if you want to change to some other way, that's entirely up to you. In fact if you want to talk some other way all the day except when you're in class, that's up to you but I think that we have a right to insist on cooperation in this, in order that our training be not wasted upon you. We charge no tuition and it costs about \$1000.00 here for every student~~XXXXXXX~~ yearly. This money is raised by the gifts of God's people and they give that money to train leaders for Christ. And it is our duty to those people who give the money to see that the people who are here getting the training are really getting it and that they are really growing spiritually and intellectually and in all the various fields that are vital and that they are becoming equipped to serve the Lord effectively. A man came to me a few years ago, he said, "I've been in the V-12 program for the Navy and I've had a year at Yale Divinity School. Now how long would it take me to finish up if I come here to Faith?" This was in the middle of the year. "Well, I said, "if you work real hard you may finish our three year course in two and a half years." In other words we thought maybe he could save one semester by virtue of a year in Yale Divinity. "Well," he said, "there's this other institution over here"- somewhat conservative but somewhat liberal - not too far away- "they tell me that in a year and a half I can graduate there. They give them a year - after all 'Yale' - a year at Yale ought to be worth a year and a half to them." "Well" I said, "it's up to you what kind of training you want". To my surprise, he came to us and he was always grateful. He said, "I learned more in one month here than I learned in the whole year at Yale Divinity". Well that's nothing against Yale as a University but the fact is it's a modernistic school. Actually, we perhaps should have said, "It'll take us a year to offset what ~~XX~~they gave you and then three more to give you the seminary work." That's what I might have said if it were a school of inferior standards. I said that once about a school I remember and the fellow just didn't come. He had $2\frac{1}{2}$ years in a modern school and wanted to finish up here. I told him it would take us 2 years at least to offset and then 3 years - and it would. We don't care to put our degree on
