When I was in college there was a young woman I met there whose father was a minister in Oklahoma but she had moved far from any (3/4) and she said to me one day, she said, last year, she said, I was with my aunt over in Pasadena one day and she said we were driving in town and she wanted to park the car and there was no place she could find to park, except one place which was about half again as long as she needed to park the car, but a bicycle was parked right in the middle of it, so you couldn't get a car in there, and so she said she stopped and I went up to the bicycle to move it ahead so as to leave plenty of room for her to park, and as I was doing it my foot caught in the bicycle and I slipped and fell over and the leg was so caught in the bicycle that it broke my ankle. Now she said, at that moment, when that happened, there was not a vacant bed in the hospital. I could not possibly have gotten into the hospital, there was no vacant place there, and there was no possibility as far as anybody knew, of one being available, during the next day. But, she said, my aunt, some people picked me up and put me in my aunt's car and she drove to the hospital and between that minute and the time when I got to the hospital a bed was unexpectedly vacated and made available by (2 1/4)

Now, she said, anybody would say what a wonderful answer to prayer, but she said nobody had prayed. Nobody had prayed. It was just a coincidence. (2 1/2)

Most wonderful things happen just by accident, humanly speaking. Things work together most wonderfully and work together most terribly. Does God actually (2 3/4)

Is there a God who controls the universe and who works things out in accordance with His plan? Well, I wonder if this works (3)

We read in <sup>Judges</sup> Genesis 4, if you will turn to it, we read there how Barak was evidently an important man in Israel, but the real leader was Deborah the prophetess, and the Israelites for twenty years had been oppressed by Jabin, king of Hazor, and his captain of his hosts, Sisera, and these nine hundred chariots of iron. The people of Hazor had the chariots of iron, it was just at the very beginning of the iron age, the Israelites had
