Archbishop put it in. But if you start the chapter where all interpreters agree that it belongs, three verses back, and if you start the paragraph where it seems to be that it belongs, with the kings shutting their mouths, then it simply is pointing out the remarkable nature of this thing, this revelation of God which is not what human beings would expect, that a mighty king would come marching and say, "These are the laws, you obey these, here's righteousness, here's justice for everybody", but that there would come something that human wisdom would never concoct but that actually is the answer to all the problems.

Question from floor: Answer: Yes, I would think so. It is something that didn't come out of human wisdom. It didn't come out of their natural expectation. It's not ~~xxx~~ sort of thing. People are always making wonderful plans. They're going to make a perfect world by carrying out these plans and these human plans never work out, because the only way you can make a perfect world is by having God carry out His plan which is entirely different from any plan human beings ever~~x~~ would follow and it is utterly unexpected. "Who would have believed it would be this way?" We have to shut our mouths when we see it. It's so different from what we would have expected but as we see it is the wisdom of God which is the foolishness of man but which ~~when~~ we get into it we see...
 that

Question from floor: Who has believed our report? It's a rather unusual way to give an invitation. Who has believed? Who has found any sense
