

fornia. You're going off chasing visions, chasing dreams. Later on when you're up in Alaska where its ^{freshman} cold sometime I'll let you come down and take my church for a month to get warmed up." So the indoctrination, in his case, not merely ruined his Christian faith, but it showed itself in his moral attitude. And the utter selfishness which displaced the complete abandonment to Christ that he seemed always to have, when he went in there as a freshman into that college. The influence of education as it ^{has} come under the hold of Wm. ^{Wald} Jennings and John Dewey and other anti-Christian influence^s in America in these last fifty years. It's effect on our education classes has been tremendous beyond description, and we are only now beginning, I mean we, as a whole, to wake up to the fact. We must admit that the Roman Catholics showed a clearness of understanding way beyond anything that we have had. When you think today, think of our Philadelphia area, with maybe 40% of the youngsters in Roman Catholic schools and you realize that they caught on long before we did to the Atheistic indoctrination which was coming into our public schools and they built their own schools, although numerically they were far behind us. Today their influence on their young people is far greater than that of the Protestants because they ~~w~~oke up and got to work on the problem, long before we did.

And so we see from these two negative illustrations how strong an influence education can be and today we have a generation in which the intelligentsia has been conditioned against Christianity and against American institutions to the extent that the things that we were proud of when I was a boy, most people speak today apologetically about. A change has come over us and it is the result of a dedicated group of people dedicated to a humanistic, secularistic, philo^sophy which they have spread into every facet of our public schools from elementary right up to the top universities. And if it were not that we knew that the great God whom we represent is far greater and more powerful than anything the world has to offer, we would just give up and surrender today because humanly speaking, the battle
