

They think

They have ideas, wonderful things. /They are going to be accomplished. But we are told here that what they are imagining is vain, it is not going to work out the way they expect that it will. We referred to Stalin a few minutes ago. We referred to Stalin a few minutes ago. People who have been imagining who are planning and sending their eyes on gold. Was there ^{ever} any group of people who are ^{more} determined to that direction than the communists have been/nearly one hundred years? Since Marx accepted the plan and outline, ^{the} and scheme to change the world in accordance with their imagining. They are going to completely change things around, and of course Marx had wonderful ideas that the rich are going to get richer and richer and fewer and fewer, the the poor labourers are going to get-pore-- poorer and poorer and more and more numerous, until the great mass of 99 % of the people of the world would ~~will~~-be oppressed and down trodden and would simply crush out the one percent that has been oppressing them, and then we will have not them on earth. That was Marx' idea, but how different it worked out. They imagined a vain thing. Marx imagined something which he thought was going to happen. He predicted definitely the stages that would take place in it. It is not happening at all/ theHe- way he explained it. He did not expect to have any strong state. You would not need a strong government. ~~And-it-is-not-happening-at-all,--~~ The state he said will disappear, because We would get rid of all oppressors, and the 99 % poor oppressed people would just get along together wonderfully and everybody is going to be happy, but how differently it has worked out. And actually, of course, Marx made the dream. He imagined something which was utterly vain because it has not worked out all the way he thought it would-- would. But Lenin came along and he revised Marx' regime. He pretended to take Marx as a complete planner, one- the one who made a picture of what was going to be done, but Lenin worked out what Marx would have never dreamed of. He worked out a system of power, and so Lenin worked out a plan whereby a little group would get complete control, and that could not be done unless you have a tremendous war that would destroy all the normal situation, and after Russia had fought for three years. I never realized until World War II the fact that in the
