

There is only one case. Once it says Jehovah! It's consistent all right! It's used once. But that's the way with so many of these arguments. When somebody gives an argument against the Word of God, son't you take what they say. Look at the facts. When you've looked at the facts, nine cases out of ten they prove not to be the way they sounded when the argument was given. That's true of an attack on any Christian doctrine. How easy it is for people to be bowled over simply by hearing people make statements without support.

Let me just suggest, when you hear an aspersion upon the character of some leader of those who are standing for Christ. Don't just believe someone who says, Oh if you knew what I know about so and so. You say, What is it you know? Press it back to them. Get the facts, and nine times out of ten you'll find it is the devil's lie and has no foundation at all to it.

But I want to refer to this argument about these alleged parallels or duplicates stories. Do you think it possible that Abraham could have said this about Sarah in Egypt and then done the same thing in the land of the Philistines? And that approximately the same course of events would happen in each case? Look into your own life and if you have some particular failing, my guess is that you fall into that sin not only once but five or six of a dozen times. Look into history. I like to think about what would happen if somebody 500 yrs. from now after this country had disappeared and people knew only a little about the history of this time (like we do perhaps of the Biblical times) was to read in a book that the man who was elected President of the U.S.A. in 1960 was shot in the south by a communist sympathizer and was succeeded by a man whose name was Johnson who had formerly been Senator from a Southern state which began with the letters T.E. Whoever read that would say, What a crazy mistake!
