

another Indian with him whose name was " ", or shortened often into " ", and this man, , knew the city of London better than any one of the pilgrims knew it. had been at this place, and there ~~was~~ ^{had been} a large Indian town right on the spot where the pilgrims settled in ~~15~~ 1641. It was 1621 now - seven years before. And seven years before this, an English ship had landed there, and they had traded with the Indians, and the Indians had been much interested in the ship, and the man treated him in a very ~~friend~~ friendly fashion, and then Captain Hunt invited a dozen of the young men to come aboard and see the appearance of the ship, see the way it was laid out. So and his friends came on to the ~~the~~ ship, and once they were well inside the ship, they were seized and tied up and the ship went to Spain and sold them as slaves. S was in Spain as a slave for a time, and then managed to escape from Spain, got to England where he met an Englishman who befriended him and cared for ~~him~~ him for a number of years. There he lived in England, and felt a great loyalty to this Englishman who treated him so well. But the Englishman could see that S was not ~~really~~ really happy, and he said, "You are not really happy here, are you?" He said, "Oh, I long for my family; I ~~long~~ ^{long} for my friends; I long to hear my own language spoken again." The man said, "I have some ships that go to that general area; I will let you go over with them." So he went in one of these ships, feeling great gratitude to this fine Englishman who treated him so well, and when he landed, he found his whole town wiped out by the pestilence, none of his friends surviving. He had been there only a few weeks when S told him about these pilgrims and brought him to them. S felt he wanted to repay the man in England who had been so good to him, and so he set out to help the pilgrims. He showed them what kind of food they could plant.
