It seems there are both advantages and disadvantages in the use of a computer. If the former custom had been still well it would have been noticed long before this that such a faithful and steady given as Mrs.

Syvertsen-Wyman would have broken her pattern of continuous giving. Information seems to be available in the computer but it does not come to our attention unless specifically looked for. So while there are advantages in one way in using a computer and in other aspects of the work these are very great, this is one regard [area] in which the computer has been proven a hindrance rather than a help.
