

5.

Whether God created the world in a period that would be equivalent to six present 24-hour days, or whether a process involving millions of years is involved, has nothing to do with the question of evolution. The theory of evolution is that all things have developed from a very simple beginning into their present complex state by purely natural forces.