

also it would be very difficult to find a way of telling infallibly who it belongs to. And so the church invisible is not a bad term for it, although there are some theologians who reject any distinction between an invisible and a visible church.

(question) Well, the difference is the term, the holy catholic church speaks of an existence of an organism. The term the communion of the saints speaks of a relationship of an individual to other individuals who are saved. An organization may be an organism, but an organism is not necessarily an organization. There is, I would say, the term communion of the saints makes stronger the belief that there is an organism. And organization is people who get together and have certain visible rules, on which they work/ An organism is something which has a relationship and has a working together which may not necessarily be written down in specific rules that are followed or specific that are held.

(question) We all believe that there is a church universal. All Christians I believe, say I believe in the holy catholic church. We all believe that there is a church universal. Well then, I say, if we believe that there is a church universal, should not that church universal be united in one group. What right do we have to break it. What right do we have to have an organization and say, you people can vote, or you people are members of this, and have certain privileges and other people don't have, and here is a brother in Christ, a man who believes in Christ, and he is not in our organization. You see. And what I mean to say is this, here is a group of 1,000 Christians, and they are real Christians, and they say, we are Christians, and we are trying to carry out the Word of God together, well now here is a group of 5,000 Christians, does this group of 1,000 here have the right to maintain a distinction from the group of 5,000 or is it necessary that they go and say we are Christians, you are Christians, we are both members of the church, let's get together and your 5,000 votes will completely overcome our 1,000 in everything. What right do they have to maintain a separate existence. As long as they repeat I believe in the holy catholic church, as long
