This is called O. T. Problems, and the idea is that we spend one hour together, and you spend three hours by yourselves, or else you spend four hours by yourselves studying problems that we discuss together.

Mr. Abernathy, could you briefly mention ideas that you have for what would be most useful for us to do this year, or what you would be most interested in.

Mr. Ab. Well, one was the use of the waw consecutive in the Hebrew, and the evidence for the traditional view as compared to ....1 3/4... Dr. Young. And the other one was a textual comparison of the Dead Sea Isaiah with the Masoretic Text. ......2......

AAM: Yes, now this second one we did some work on that, Mr. Meznar and Mrs. Wilson and I last spring. We didn't get very far in it, I think we opened up something of method, and we touched a few interesting passages. But it is a tremendous field, and you either take a little area and you go into it, and you learn quite a bit about the method, or you take some selected ones and of one type or another, or you could make a survey of things that have been written on it, and take their conclusions, and try to check their evidences and see what you thought of their conclsuions, whether they were justified or not, examining key evidences. Those would be three ways that could be done. Mr. Hayes, what occurs to you of particular interest?

Mr. H. I don't know, I haven't thought of anything.

AAM: Well, now, just in general what is your interest now, even in connection with you thesis? Just so it is beyond the hours of your thesis. You are particularly interested in the LXX I believe. You are particularly interested in the LXX but now also in the Hebrew, I believe. Hebrew/ grammar, Hebrew vocabular, Hebrew reading, and so on? Are you not? But more in the LXX. Oh, I see, you mean you would put the two on a par. ...3½.....

Mr. Meznar, you are visiting us today, you don't have an idea that particularly occurs to you, of something that you would be particularly interested in, or something that you think would be interesting for them