

which God gave the books to the writers or through the writers and God worked, so that they were so accepted by the people from them. In both places the Christian world, looked with unanimity as to which books these had been without any official decision by any great Christian leaders or by any council. But the council of Nicea had affirmed the books of Old and New Testaments and Athanasias letter did much to quiet any particular question that was between individuals here and there. He had a tremendous influence but would certainly make no claim or decision in this matter himself. The statement you read is perfectly all right as stated but there might be implications which would not be right. -----5

If they said the canon had been made as a result of the letters; it would not be right but if they say of which the letters give evidence, all right. Doubtless the letters contributed to allay any questions which might come up.

question - Athanasias was then in exile from 362 - 363 until the death of Julian, then he returned to Alexandria and was there until 367 when he was sent into exile again. After a few months at the tomb of his father, hiding there, he was allowed to come back and continued until 373.

question - Jovian only ruled from 363-4. Jovian received him. Jovian was an orthodox emperor but only reigned 8 mos.

question - Under Julian he came back from his 3rd exile but didn't come as a result of Julian's order but came before Julian gave the order. Then Julian tried to have him killed.

4. Apollinarianism - nothing to do with Arianism

This is the view advanced by Apollinarian. It is a view in which you had something to do in Systematic Theology. Actually it is a step in a long period of controversy which is dealt with extensively in Systematic Theology. I will not say much about it here but it is of some importance here at this point so it is necessary to introduce it here. I want you to get a general idea of what it is. Apollinarius was a son of a Christian leader. He was a
