

...and so we find in verse 10, when his soul will make an offering for sin, or when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, when this work of substitutionary atonement is performed it is effective. When this sin offering is made there is a result that he shall see seed, he will see results, he will see a spiritual posterity, he will see accomplishment. Who shall declare his generation? Well, everybody will (1) after it happens. It will be effective, and he will prolong days. His life doesn't come to an end. He is raised from the dead, he appears with the disciples, and then his life doesn't stop, he is going to ascend to heaven and continue his activity there. He prolongs days. The pleasure of the Lord prospers in his hands, the work of the servant is indeed accomplished, if he does what the Lord wants him to do. He--it is effective, he will see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied, he won't say it was wasted, I have worked all this time, I did all this and there's ~~no~~ just no effect from it, that is a very miserable experience that every teacher has sometime during his life, of pouring out his soul, trying to get some thoughts across and then find that nobody got the thoughts. I had an interesting experience of dropping in on an old friend of mine, a very strong modernist, who was a professor in the U. of Chicago Divinity School, and I just happened to get to town the very last day of the summer session. I didn't realize that. But I had known him in college where he and I had had many bouts, because he was a very strong modernist, very interesting chap, very bright fellow, we used to have very interesting arguments in class. He loved to have them, only thing that disappointed him was that in the end I didn't come around to his view. But there he was giving a course in which he was trying to get some great spiritual thoughts across while giving up the whole basic teaching of the Scriptures, but to get these thoughts across that to him were the basis ^{for} of the ongoing of civilization as it ought to be in line with individual views, and it was the last day of the class, and I found out where his class was, without knowing it was the last day, and I stepped in and I sat down there and he began summarizing his course and the students began asking questions, and
