

the next might be in a church four blocks west, and then lunch would be served in a building two blocks to the south. Something had to be done.

Just at this emergency God wonderfully provided the possibility of purchasing the splendid Widener estate north of Philadelphia. The building had been empty for nine years, and no ordinary eye could see its possibilities. However, God gave the directors ability to see what it might become, and gave their officers wisdom for making the arrangements and securing the money to purchase the estate.

Every year since that time visitors have noticed an amazing improvement in the property. Frequently a visitor who has been away only a month or two expresses his surprise at seeing how rapidly the estate is regaining its former beauty.

Most wonderful of all, the property was found to be perfectly adapted to the use of a theological seminary. When I first realized this, I said it would almost seem as if someone was looking over the shoulder of the original planner of the building, telling him how to arrange everything so as to be suited to a seminary. Then I realized that my hypothetical statement was actually simply a matter of fact. God had indeed directed in the original planning of the building, that it might be suited for our purpose.

God has wonderfully blessed during these nineteen years, and we know that He has great purposes ahead, if we keep our eyes on Him, and keep looking to the world-wide needs of His kingdom. We constantly pray that He will send us the money that we need, that He will send
