

made ~~an~~ an ~~an~~ outline that Machen used for the book and gave him credit for it in the introduction. Between that time and the time when I came to Princeton, the president of the institution, I understand, buttered up this man and won him over to his anti-Machen viewpoint, and when I got there he was always a bitter enemy of Machen, and all that Machen stood for. This was a great surprise to me, to see his attitude when I got there.

I believe it was at the end of my second year in seminary that the General Assembly was held in Baltimore and I went down there and attended a good many of its meetings. When the Just as the assembly was about to begin copies of a magazine, was it called The Presbyterian? I forget the last word in it--in the title, a magazine published at that time in Pittsburgh, and widely used among read among Presbyterians, a copy was given to everyone who was coming to ~~the~~ the meeting. This had an article prominently displayed, called, "When the Professors Disagree." The article quoted a man in Cambridge, ~~Oxford~~ [I forget whether it was Cambridge or Oxford] as strongly criticizing R. D. Wilson. It ~~seems~~ seems that Wilson had been there and spoken to a Christian group on the campus, and ~~he~~ T. R. (initials ?) Glover, who was called the orator of the university, was away at the time; at least he did not hear much about the meeting at the time when it ~~occurred~~ occurred, but someone took down what Dr. Wilson said in shorthand and then had it printed up without Dr. Wilson's ever seeing it. When this little pamphlet came ~~out~~ out--which was his message defending the Bible--at one place in it he used a phrase that had been common in his family, a phrase meaning "strange to say." The phrase was a common phrase when ~~Wilson~~ Wilson was a child; all the schools taught Latin, and many people commonly used Latin phrases in their discussions, and this was a very common phrase. However, whether a mistake of one letter, the final letter of one its two words, was made by the person who took it down in shorthand, or whether it was made by the printer, or whether it was a typographical error which was not noticed; at any rate there was this wrong final letter of one of the two words, and Professor Glover said of Wilson, "They say he ~~knows~~ knows dozens of languages, but ~~his~~ his knowledge of Latin is atrocious, or something like that. Dr. Wilson said, "This is a terrible slam on me--to give
