proposition set forth in the Bible."

I do not know whether the man who wrote the letter ~~xxx~~ to which I referred was == got his ideas from Stonehouse or Woolley's writing or whether he perhaps got it from one of the == I know there have been one or more Master's theses written at Westminster on the subject of the events of those days, and it might be that he got it from one of them. I would think this unlikely because whatever one might say of disagreement on emphases at Westminster its men == I am sure the faculty there would not accept a paper for a degree if it said in it what was patently untrue that Machen was ousted from the Independent Board. It would be more likely that they would say as in both of these that he had been ousted from the presidency. It is a serious question whether such a term as ousted properly should be used in such connected. When an organization has regular elections at regular intervals- the fact that a man is not reelected is not properly called his being ousted.
