

~~xxx~~ lay a foundation. You have to get certain important principles. You have to get those principles in line. When I first took Hebrew in Seminary. People said to me that Hebrew is like going into a dark house. For six weeks you don't have any idea of what anybody is talking about. You simply memorize rule and at the end of six weeks you come out ~~xxxx~~ on the other side, and you ~~g~~ begin to understand what it is all about. In all the textbooks that I know of, up to 30 years ago they tried to give you too much at once, and you couldn't see the inter-real-relation, and you add too much together at once, and you couldn't understand it and therefore it was a complete mystery, but I ~~start~~-thought that was a completely wrong way to ~~teach~~ teach Hebrew ~~so~~ so I worked out a system of progression, advance in which you learn things one by one. ~~And~~ You didn't fully understand the thing that ~~w~~ you were given but you understood enough ~~xxx~~ about it that you were not in the dark. And my ~~students~~ students were learning enough in one year than ~~xxx~~ any other school that I ever heard of was learning in two ~~years-~~ years. . . . ~~you understood enough about it that you were not in the dark,-~~ and with no more effort than was necessary to learn in two years, because they had a logical approach.

They tried to give you too much at once. And the result was that you had too ~~much-together-~~ get at once, and you couldn't understand it in relation. Therefore it was a complete mystery, but I decided that was a completely wrong way. So I worked out a system, advance in which you learn to think one by one. You didn't fully understand what you were given, but you understood enough ~~xxx~~ about it that you weren't in the dark ~~xxx~~ anymore. . . Well, I never wrote a text-book on it, because I was constantly improving it, and as you improve it in one regard there are ~~some-ways-that-~~ other ways that you can't make it quite as good, but
