

a period of ~~my~~ years, other members of the faculty stopped attending chapel until the time came when hardly any faculty members attended, and a great part of the purpose of the chapel services was lost. I fear that they are no longer fulfilling the purpose that we had in mind in starting them. If this is the case it might be ~~wis~~ wise to go back to a situation in not as far as the Princeton and Westminster situation, but far enough that it would not be too great a strain on faculty and students to have all students at each long chapel chapel service that was longer than 15 minutes, and each to have all students present and all faculty members present so that the faculty can take their turn with full knowledge of situations and needs.