

ordinary citizens of Soviet Russia, aside from the upper class bureaucrats themselves. Large numbers of prospectors went out and endured privations, hunting for gold, and great amounts of gold were discovered. The principle of free enterprise, in Russia as well as in America, is the principle which automatically results in increased production, and consequently, in having more to distribute. Also, free enterprise when unhampered, results in competition for sales among companies, leads inevitably to the lowest prices, better distribution, and raises the standard of living for all, as it has done in this country.

The free enterprise system is the hen that lays the golden eggs. Theological 'Modernists' or 'Liberals' and World Council leaders desire to kill the hen and take the gold that is in it and divide it up, so that all will have an equal amount. If they do so, not only will the prospects of future advance be killed, but our nations will, inevitably, sink back to an economic standard much inferior to that which we now enjoy.

4. Communism necessarily leads to cruelty and brutality.

Not only does socialism inevitably lower living standards instead of raising them; a communistic system by its very nature brings great harm to most of its people.

No one can know much of what has happened in Russia in this century, without seeing the tyranny, the brutality, and the cruelty which is there. Under the Soviet system, anyone who dissents in the slightest degree soon finds himself subjected to barbarous torture and imprisonment. Time fails to describe the savagery and injustices which are so common under the severe arbitrary oppression of the Soviet regime. Anyone who has question about these matters has only to read such books as Eugene Lyons, Assignment To
