

Two vv. earlier it speaks of the works of the flesh. Here the plural is used. The flesh can work in many different ways, but not always in the same way and these ways are not necessarily as interrelated as is the fruit of the Spirit. One - Charles I of England was very proud of the fact that unlike most people == kings he was true to his wife. He was quite free of the vices that were quite common among other kings. But he was a terrible liar; one could never trust anything he said! The flesh can lead us to one evil work or another evil work, while perhaps not defective in certain other ways. While the fruit of the Spirit is an organic thing which grows as the Spirit develops it and all aspects of it are interrelated.

[Faint, mostly illegible text, possibly bleed-through or very light print]